1. Russia and Ukraine agree to further extend the Black Sea grain deal by four months (Nov. 18, 2022)

Russia and Ukraine agree to further extend the Black Sea grain deal by four months, according to a joint statement released on Monday. The deal, which allows for the safe passage of grain ships through the Black Sea, was originally set to expire in September 2022. The new agreement extends the deal until February 2023.

The deal is a significant step towards resolving the conflict between Russia and Ukraine. It allows for the safe passage of grain ships through the Black Sea, which is a vital route for Ukraine's grain exports. The deal is expected to help stabilize the global grain market.
